British Hammered Off Spanish Coast

The British navy again took a beating in the Atlantic. One can only wonder how long they can and are willing to sustain such heavy losses.

With the British army running like cowards with their tails between their legs in Spain orders were given to several groups of U-boats to proceed off the Spanish coast and lay in wait. They did not need to wait for long, in a series of pitched battles with U-boats attacking from all angles the German U-Boat fleet wrecked total havoc on the unsuspecting British convoy. Hits were reported at the highest rate of the war to date with the carrier Furious being hit by multiple torpedoes and sinking fast the first night. Several hits were also reported on the Rodney with was thought to have sustained major damage. A squadron of British Destroyers was also reported to have been sunk as they ran in circles searching for the elusive predators. An Estimated 650K tonnes of British shipping was reported to have been sunk in the onslaught.

British Attacked in North Sea

A combination of new German E-Boats and several groups of U-Boats sought out British Naval assets patrolling in the North Sea. In a series of battles swift attacks were made starting with a surprise torpedo attack by our E-Boats. Multiple hits were recorded on the destroyers and cruisers. Several U-Boats penetrated the screen in the confusion and have reported to have sunk several British cruisers.

Initial reports confirmed the loss of three British cruisers and approximately twenty destroyers. When daylight broke units of the British Coastal command based in England and occupied Norway strafed and depth charged German E-Boats and U-Boats. German losses have been reported as extremely light with some E-Boats shot up and the loss of a captured Russian sub flotilla.

Allied forces on the Move in Spain

Combined forces of Germany, Italy, and Spain continue the push to remove the British invaders from Continental Europe. Some 50 divisions continue the chase as British troops on the run leaving behind the remains of a once proud Portuguese army. Elements of allied forces are reported to be on the outskirts of Lisbon and nearing Gibraltar. Food, fuel, and ammunition are reported to be in short supply by the soldiers captured by advancing forces.

RAF Continues Terror Attacks

This month saw more terror attacks by the RAF aimed at those that were thought to be friends. Hundreds of bombers loaded up with high explosives were again launched at Antwerp. One would have thought that the bombings of last summer and the bombing of Madrid aimed at civilian targets would make those in charge to rethink the target selection by the war criminal Churchill.

Hundreds of German fighters and newly placed AAA batteries shot down many of the attackers. The bombers were limited to the outskirts of town and not the more densely populated center of town. Civilian casualties were reported to be heavy however. Local hospitals were given assistance by local German units.

If these acts of barbarism continue the German Luftwaffe will have no choice but to make England an island of fire and devastation. One does hope however that the criminals in England will stop targeting civilian targets.

Free Press Attacked

The free press came under attack this month by the British government. The Dublin Chronicle is the one press without any governmental interference. Lies and deceit can no longer be spread by the British. We can only wonder what the British people would do with the truth in their hand and not Churchills stories.

On the Move in the East

A series of probing attacks were started in preparation of this years spring offenses. Several German corps was ordered to test Russian resistance given the new leadership. What they found was new leadership same old capability. Russian infantry just ran at the sounds of German Armored advance. The town of Novgorod was captured with no resistance offered. The final assault towards Moscow looks to be in the making.
